

How secure is your job?

If you watch the news, you know about the "global economy." The telemarketer who interrupts your dinner is calling from India. Your clothes are made in Honduras or Mexico; your Ipod and coffeemaker, in China. Thousands of American workers get laid off every week. Even professionals and skilled technicians feel threatened.

If you leave your USPS job, it could be hard to match your salary and benefits. Most job growth in the USA is in the service economy. Low wages. No health insurance or pensions. No unions.

APWU members are protected against layoffs. That didn't just happen. APWU officers skillfully negotiated that protection with the Postal Service. Given a chance, USPS would run the place with casuals instead of you.

APWU cares about protecting your job, your salary and your benefits. APWU cares about what's important to you.

How APWU works for me. My life's hard enough without worrying if I'm still going to have my job at the end of the week. But thanks to the union, my job—and yours—is safe. It's in our contract. No mass dismissals like at GM, IBM or Ford. No lost pensions like at the airlines. Nobody getting fired without cause. APWU means I can count on guaranteed paychecks, benefits and job security.
